Emma collapsed, foaming at the mouth. The effects of the neurotoxin had run their course, including the stream of gibberish to her Ukranian friend Lola, who knelt by her side.

Lola brushed Emma's matted hair aside and paused. A sudden urge to kiss her friend on the lips overwhelmed her. She leaned in closer, cradling the limp girl's head in her hand.

Chapter 3 by Luke Meyers

Alarm bells were going off in Emma's head. Someone was cradling her, brushing her hair back like a lover. She didn't remember any lover. Just as she started to blink her eyes open, something soft touched her lips. Someone was kissing her! Emma's eyes flashed open.

"Lola? What the fuck!" Emma drew herself up angrily and shoved Lola away. "What the hell are you doing?"

Lola stammered. "I just... I don't know, I got confused. There was the stuff and then I was taking care of you and you just seemed so peaceful and fuck I'm sorry can we just forget it happened?"

Emma's continuing glare made it clear she was less than convinced by Lola's babble. "I don't care what your excuse is, sicko! I was unconscious! What were you going to do next if I didn't come to? Jesus! Didn't you ever hear that only yes means yes?"

Lola seemed strangely far away for a second while Emma ranted at her. When she spoke, it was like she was jumping in from a different conversation. "...but I don't want to have to... fine." Lola's body jerked like a puppet. Emma's eyes went wide as she watched Lola's pupils contract to tiny points.

Lola's lips parted, and an unfamiliar voice rasped from within her.

Chapter 8 by intellikat

Magical Pen stepped out into the street with Father. It wasn't much of a fight really, what with Magical Pen able to transmute and warp space-time, etc. He turned Father's legs into two Nuremberg sausages and then proceeded to club him repeatedly over the head with capped end until he was barely conscious in a heap. Mother was watching the whole affair, weeping. A few mourners had taken a casual interest in the proceedings, but were wandering off now to buy falafel from a street vendor.

"W-why?" stammered Father, from the pavement.

"You people JUST WON'T LISTEN!" cried Magical Pen. "It's always the same. You think you can handle the power; you can't handle the power. You destroy everything and then you blame me! Atlantis, Rome, The Mound Builders, Mayans, Disco! Why can't you just realise you weren't meant to be anything more than what you are? Just live your life and enjoy what it is." Magical Pen unloosened his tie in disgust.

"J-just tell me one thing," said Father. "Just tell me this and then I will let you go. I'll let you go without thrashing you any further."

Magical Pen shook his head and frowned.

If I asked you for a wish, would you... See more of Story Wars

"Yes, yes. But if I promised you that I would reform and become a philanthropist, would you grant me my wish of... of, well... two Japanese-Canadian chicks? Best of both worlds, you see."

"Your wife is standing right behind you!"

"S-she's quite progressive, you'll see."

And with that, thoroughly frustrated with the human race, Magical Pen flipped his cap off and buried his point into Father's skull.
